Although it was designed in 1937, the T-6 Texan remained a prevalent primary trainer in USAF well into the 1950s. More than 15,000 Texans were built, and the trainer was used extensively by both the US Navy and allied air forces. Here, students at Randolph AFB, Tex., stop for the camera before a training mission.

Another North American Aviation, Inc., trainer, the T-28 Trojan was also used by the Navy. During the Vietnam War, the Trojan was modified for counter-insurgency duty, armed with two .50-caliber machine guns and up to 1,800 pounds of rockets or bombs. In an odd twist, Air Training Command during the 1960s used the T-28 to give its helicopter pilot trainees 120 hours of fixed-wing experience before they moved on to helicopter training.

Maj. B. Gordon via David W. Menard

Ever since it entered operational service in 1961, the T-38 Talon has been the mainstay for training USAF pilots in high-performance aircraft. The Air Force also uses the T-38 to help its pilots maintain flying proficiency when they are assigned to units that fly such aircraft as the B-2 and U-2. Ongoing modifications and structural renewals will keep this sturdy aircraft in service until 2020, a mind-stretching 61 years after its first flight. ■
