

Tufted Lancer

Searching for ways to improve aerodynamic design, engineers had one side of this new Republic P-43 Lancer covered with pieces of string. The engineers then used movie cameras to record movements of the strings during wind tunnel and other tests. In this way, they determined the patterns of airflow over different parts of the aircraft.